The numerous poems written by Gregory had a profound influence over Byzantine hymnology, although, beyond that, they largely provide a treasure trove of autobiographical and historical data. And for this reason a certain Roman queen said that they were most unhappy, in that they could more easily fall in love than be fallen in love with; whereas they are rather happy in their immunity from that second and indeed more frequent infelicity, that females are more apt to be fallen in love with than to fall in love. Eusebius Ecclesiastical History, Book 5, Chapter 23 c. Errorratingbook. He gave, however, the place of most importance to content: what was said was more important than how it was said. The Nazarenes existed well into the third century, and were actively engaged in a dialogue -- "heated, no doubt," says Ray Pritz -- with rabbinic Judaism.

I have learned what was then and often still is considered crucial doctrines,
