The influence of the map While the map was intended for Jesuit and Spanish officials, it was used for alternative agendas when modified and reprinted. The situation of the kingdom, bounded on every side by the dominions of a more powerful neighbour, did not afford free scope to the activity of the Portuguese by land, as the strength of their monarchy was no match for that of Castile.

This is stated in an anonymous report sent to the Council of Portugal: . He committed the conduct of them to Fernando Gomez, a merchant in Lisbon, to whom he granted an exclusive right of commerce with all the countries of which Prince Henry had taken possession. Alerta Austral in Spanish.
