He was saved from a shipwreck only to become a component of the landscape of the poem, that is, he is another ruin in the sea, living there beyond his existence. Like the gods, the poet can- not be totally seen, his existence goes beyond the image reflected in the mir- ror. InwinkelwagenMeerinformatie. Both worlds share a strong magical dimension. Whether by the force of a religious exorcism or by the magic of a love philter, tears and pus become distinct substances, but, as the poem has already implied, both religion and love also provide ample ground for the confusion of these and other efflu- ences of bodily matter.

Ecomoseoquefosserealmenteimportancefosseabstractamentepedirepromethe father cradles the son and we can almost hear their conversation in a church near the sea – immense is the light in the Jewish Port, the blue of its narrow bay, those who travel far from their homeland disappear. I hat is the reward for his dispersed, lacerated body.
