Below Winsford, the course of the river has been altered several times, by the construction of cuts and locks, to enable small ships to trade on it; the river formerly joined the River Mersey at Weston Marsh, but since the construction of the Manchester Ship Canalbegun init has flowed into the canal, from where Weaver in the Sluices water enters the Mersey by the Weaver sluices, just upstream of the junction. In a defensive building he would be able to protect himself against any revolution by the masses from nearby Manchester or Liverpool.
