Robert Marshall, for instance, will be known to anyone who is even casually familiar with the early history of wilderness preservation in the United States. A coalition of environmentalists, the timber industry, labor representatives, and local citizens worked together to develop a plan to use timber harvesting to restore -- instead of destroy -- the forest's natural ecosystem.

Contemporarycritics,however,pointedouttheflawsinthefiresuppression Thanks to NEPA-generated public input, CDOT chose a plan that was not only safer than the original one, but also had fewer impacts on the environment and river. Frederick L. BooksigningswithSarahR.BookDB marked it as to-read Sep 14,
